Before yesterday's game started National League, had made a personal investigation of the incident.

Before yesterday's game started Quigley and Evers shook hands, settling their personal quarrel.

President Tener went to Salisbury Beach last night for a week without making any statement regarding the result of his investigation, and without saying what action would be taken regarding the charges filed against Umpire Quigley by James Gaffney, owner of the Braves.

According to Gaffney, President Tener is inclined to consider the incident as closed, while the Braves' owner thinks that his complaint against the umpire should not be disregarded.
